

Similarly, natural behaviors of animals can be shown to the public in time-cycled or automated exhibits which do not require a handler. On a regular time interval basis, or when the visitor pushes a button, the animal will go through some given cycle of natural behavior which the public seldom has the opportunity of watching -- a deer leaping from rock to rock, a raccoon stealing an egg, a coatimundi swinging across on a vine, etc.